OUR INDUSTRIAL CONDITIONS. The end and object of human society is not money making but human happiness. Countless millions cannot atone for the loss of human comfort, of social content and of the high instincts of freedom. And any people who lose all this, lose liberty. For what is liberty without these things? Inordinate wealth stands a self-confessed enormity. There is an expression Of All Spring Seasons about one being "enormously rich. It is a most appropriate phrase. All this niled-up wealth plundered from the producers, by moneyed conspirators, is an enormity and nothing else. It is turning human life itself into a merspeculation and the sons of men into creatures made for the spollers' nets The extreme of wealth, and that wealth concentrated in the hands of the few engenders and fosters the spirit of enste and domination, while its antithesis extreme penury, breeds discontent, crime, and a disposition to rebel against all authority. The arrogant assump tion, that wealth confers special privi leges upon its possessors, is the threatening danger of society, for they are only content in ever-increasing accumulation of riches to sustain their usurp ation of power which if not arrested ends in their own destruction, and consequent instability of government. The remedy, necessary to a just relation between capital and labor, is not to be found in violent outbursts of de structive vengeance against the greedy rich, but in calm philosophic thought and the inflexible determination to reform existing evils by peaceful Start a Library methods, which alone are productive of beneficient and permanent results. The air is full of remedies. Some say it lies here and others that it lies there, and again others who maintain that everything is wrong and that the whole fabric of things governmental and soclal, must be destroyed before the condition of men may be improved. Against the indiscriminate inconoclasm of such there should be emphatic protest. The country has reached no such crisis. The fundamental principles upon which the American government has been established are in the main good and sound. The hope of the oppressed lies today in the spirit of the teachings of the fathers of the government. It is not necessary to utterly demolish the structure they reared. Many, if not all the wrongs, which labor endures, may be effectively cured by the means provided in the constitution and without resort to extra legal processes. The ballot box may still be used to the advantage of the people, few of its great ones and parade them champion. Vest and Tillman may and as the majority of the voters are warge-workers, they have the power of relief within themselves, and must eventually succeed if they proceed along practical lines, and pay no heed to mad dreamers nor their impossible Utopian dreams.
